syndicate, Mr. Harlan."

assuringly.

by blowing you up."

"Cartainly," he answered heartily

"I appreciate your scruples, but they were unnecessary. Quite unnecessary.

I renew the invitation. Come any day

CHAPTER IX.

Opposition had no terrors for Mr.

Harlan. He expected it. He understood his business, and his business was to overcome it. Delays did not annoy him, difficulties did not discourage him, complications only gave him new zest for his task. He had never found

"YOU DON'T SEEM GLAD TO SEE anything worth doing which could be

It was with no novel sensations, then, that Mr. Harian returned to his house, and seating himself in the easy-chair and his easy-chair had solved many another puzzle, remedied many another lan. He rang the bell, ordered the

Who and what was this Kennard.

then dismissed him for the night.

ME.

we call experience.

at the problem.

THE MINORITY

By FREDERICK TREVOR HILL

Author of "The Case and Exceptions," etc.

(Copyright, 1902, by Frederick A. Stokes & Co.)

"I appreciate what you have been the lack of welcome. He nodded in regood enough to say, Mr. Harlan," be turn, and while the servant moved about the room arranging the cigars remarked after a pause, "and I think I and glasses, he stood with his back to should make it perfectly plain to you the fire stroking his black mustache. why I would not go into this thing which had acquired an oily look and even if I thought it a good business a drooping curl at either end. His venture. The very first evening we bair, which was plastered in little met, you may remember Mason and scallops over his forehead and deeply the others joking about my being a parted from the back of his head, bore crank on work-people. Well, I'm a crank still. I think I take more inevidence of the cheap barbers' manipulation. The whole appearance of the terest in my workmen than I do in the man had undergone a transformation factory, although, of course, the two since his last visit. Every weak line are so closely allied it is only when in his face showed plainly and his one stops to think that he can locate rough, coarse features had been temthe center of his interest. These men are something more to me than animated wheels. I am something more to them than their employer. I have pered until his whole personality fairly recked with brutal vulgarity. "Well, Josh," he began affably, as the butler closed the door. "You don't a small village of them on the Hudseem glad to see me." son, and for some years I have conducted the business largely for them

"Didn't I tell you not to call here again!"

although it has resulted in my own profit too. That is at the bottom of The answer came from behind Mr. Harlan's newspaper. my rejection of any proposition of the "So you did. But what's the dif? don't come at reception hours or ask The two men strolled downstairs toto meet your daughter, do I?" gether, but it was not until they were about to part that Mr. Harlan spoke Mr. Harlan slapped his paper to-"There's one thing more I ought to

"You must be drunk!" he muttered. say," he began. "You may think it McMannis laughed. strange that knowing what I do, I "Dammed if I don't think I am." should have accepted your invitation retorted, "but you're the winner by it to inspect your factory. I did so be-this time.' cause I could not well refuse at the He stepped toward his host as he time, and thought something might spoke and tossed a roll of bills upon turn up to prevent, as it did. But I the table. want you to know I never intended to "What's that?" make the visit. You understand, do

"The 50 plunks I owe you. Don't Kennard shook his bost's hand regreen.

on't even know what it is, but I said you like. We'll take you from cellar give up this, and, hell-it was orth it to see you jump!" to roof, and I promise we won't do it McMannis helped himself to a cigar, bit the end off, and spat it out in a putter of laughter.

and stuffed them into his pocket without a word.

at his visitor. "You got a good job?"

han an inquiry. "Yes, better than I expected, and re might have a drink on it," he edded, eyeing the bottles with a grin.

"What is it?" "Whisky, of course." Mr. Harlan's face relaxed for an intant, but became rigid again as he ushed the bottles forward. "I meant what job did you get. I hought you'd quit drinking." "So I have, but this in an occa-

Josh." He poured out a generous portion of raw liquor, smelt it, nodded over the class, and tossed it off with a peuliar jerk of his neck, following it up with a swallow of water. "That's my third to-day-honest ount and polls closed to-night," he ouchsafed, as he wiped his mouth accomplished easily. He had often seen on the back of his hand and picked up his most careful plans miscarry, but his half-chewed cigar. never without learning the reason, and Mr. Harlan lifted a paper-knife from with him the discovery of an error rethe table, tried its edge absent-mind- he sauntered back to the telegraph ofedly, and then sat silent, bending the fice and sent a message to Mrs. Parvealed the remedy. His success was blade back and forth between his sons at Mamaroneck, saying he had built upon that solid concrete of mistakes, surprises, and corrections which fingers. McMannis watched him with missed his train. It should have been

> "What is your job?" The question was sullen and disdainspoke no word.

of his library proceeded to work out "A snap-a soft snap. Chief of the the secret of his fallure with John Kennard, for at the outset he admitted he had failed completely. There was no though it's known as assistant high ing spirits, and when the lights of workman. Say, but that's good liquor, the necessity for deceiving himself. He It was ten o'clock-still it. And since you press me so cor- depress him. dial, Josh, I guess I'll take one more early in the evening for Joshua Harteaspoonful.

butler to bring whisky and soda, and He poured out another deep drink, and guiped it down with a "here's Mr. Harlan filled a long glass with how!" and a shuddering exhalation of ing closely at the half-hidden drivers. whisky and soda and began working breath like a man in a bitter-cold But one by one they drove off, and ether, struck a match on his trouser anyway? A man who had found his business prepared and ready for his burst out laughing as he noted Harhand, who had never had to work his lan's bored and contemptuous glance. "Say, what's the matter with you, way up or experience set-back and failure. It had all been such plain sail- Josh!" he exclaimed. "You're as huffy ing that he had had leisure to theorize as hell, and look as glum as Dolan's slowly into the fog. Hoping against and indulge his theories, coddling his goat when she swallered the tin-can workmen and playing with economic crossways. Take a drink. Have one suit, and was soon rewarded by recognostrums until the sentimentalist in on me, and stop chewing the rag for nizing Carroll Parsons' astrakhan coat him was satisfied and his self-suffi- five minutes anyhow. Gosh, but you and furs. With a cheerful halloo he ciency complete. Let him experience do look silly!" McMannis broke into another spasm nonsense about it, and the superior of merriment, quieted down, wiped his eyes, and then glancing at Mr. Harhis mouth. Perhaps Trundell could be lan's solemn, unmoved countenance, made to see this yet, and, if so, the burst forth again into peal upon peal amateur economist might have his pet of laughter, until the tears ran down theories tested and his cut-and-dried his face and he had to seat himself

> "What is the-er-the chief of walking delegates expected to do?"

The question was asked contemptuously and with weary indifference, but McMannis in his social mood welcomed it eagerly.

What does he do?" he responded, locularly. "What won't he do when I'm It? That's the question to ask, Josh Harlan. I've been waiting for a chance like this for years, and now 've got it, I'll work it, you bet. Say, do you know how many men's-how

Mr. Harlan shook his head.

'Well, I'll tell you." McMannis drew his chair closer to his host and leaned forward confidentially, pouring out another drink of whisky as he talked. -there's more than 26,000 in ahead of me. Now d' ye see where I'm at? Maybe you think the organination won't take care of me now? Maybe I won't control a bunch of votes worth having, and maybe I don't know the market value of 'em, nerther. They thought they'd stall me at Philadelphia for up the state-but not much! New York city's my mound, drink, and then proceeded in an uglier tone, his language coarsening as his tongue loosened.

"Yes, and I'm goin' to make some you bet. Oh, I see you staring at me, could give you away and see you squirm! stacy of mirth, which ended in a knuckling of his eyes and a long blast

"Well, well," he panted at last, "you've stood by me some, Josh, while others have done me dirt, and I don't guess I'll forget anybody. I've been walked on enough to see there's nothin' in playin carpet, and now I'm goin' to try a few steps myself. S-shaysay, but I've been trod on so long, it seems kinder natural to lie down when anybody gets in my way. Just before I went to Philadelphia I was acting delegate in the out-of-town disgether and smashed it down upon the trict, and got orders to look up a fellow who keeps one of those model factories on the river. It was way off down the Hudson, so I telephoned him I was coming, but never got no answer, and when I got there the guy wouldn't see me and I actually vamoosed. Say, but you oughter heard the way the fellows horsed me about that! The idea of a delegate lettin' himself be turned down got them. But that comes of gettin' used to bein' wint, pld man. They're the genuine pavement. Next time I call, my bird'll see me all right, all right. And I call soon! I won't do a thing but roast "Then you got-" scon! I won't do a thing but roast "Elected? Sure, Mike. I don't him, you bet! Kennard's his nameromise to pay you all I owe you. I ever heard of him? Say, did I tell you what I was workin' to get from the organization?" he rattled on. "Well, I'm layin' to have a friend of mine appointed factory inspector, and if I do, the rake-off won't be a thing to what I can pick up on the side. Those Mr. Harlan glanced suspiciously at fellows has the power to file papers the man, slowly gathered up the bills, against the companies, and make 'em come near building their buildings over again in complyin' with the law. It'd Then he leaned forward, relit his work in great with the delegate busicigar over the lamp, and sat staring ness. Now, f' instance, suppose youse -suppose you had a factory- S-say, are you listening, you frozen-faced The words were a statement rather goat?

Yes, Mr. Harlan was listening.

sion. If we wait till you get another Some face you may look for in vain, lvidend it'll be a long time between some voice may fall to greet youthat often happens in crowds they lost or are you?

Kennard hurrled across the muddy floor, dodged through the nearest exit. raced to the barrier, and reached it just as the iron gate rolled to and bit its lock with a vicious snap.

"Next local 5:94 on track 2!" chanted the official, mechanically.

broad grin on his shiny face, but punctually late, as usual, but some-walking delegates you might call it, nard had almost recovered his droop-Mamaroneck station twinkled Josh! Funny such a good hand at through the haze, not even the damp buying it don't have no real taste for fog and chilly atmosphere served to left an impression that for some rea-the platform, and Kennard picked his recall none of his plans for changing way among the traps and teams, peerwind. Then he rubbed his hands to- when Kennard reached the station again, all the cabs had also disapleg, started to relight his cigar, but peared, and he faced the prospect of ways associate you with spoiled jackwalking to his destination, lugging a heavy bag. Resigning himself to this fate, he started down the road, in the wake of a low dog-cart disappearing hope, he quickened his pace in purran up behind the cart, tossed in his bag, and swung himself into the seat beside the girl.

"Well met, Carroll!" he exclaimed. "If you were trying to abandon me, I had a narrow escape."

She laughed pleasantly in answer as the pony started forward at a brisk pace, striking sparks from the flinty road.

"Well, how are you?" he continued do tell me you haven't got a horrid lot of outsiders."

'Really, I don't think I'm in a posily, "but I fear I must have—that there must be a mistake. You are not-" "I have been trying to tell you so ever since we started. Now I feel like a criminal. I shall never be able to convey to Miss Parsons the warmth of your greeting!" of these companies set up and count, The merry laugh which had first answered him broke forth again.

"I hope you will pardon me," he began once more. "I thought this was ous. Mrs. Parsons' cart and-" "It is." "And you are-"Unintentionally disguised in Miss Parsons' coat and furs, which she'll never forgive me for wearing in weather like this, even if she condones the theft of your greeting. Hereafter I shall change the proverb, 'We are known by our friends,' to 'Our clothes are known by our friends." I wish I knew a few of them. Damned if I wouldn't come and pay up so's I "I know you now. You are-"

"One of the horrid outsiders. I confess it!" "That's hardly fair, Miss Harlan."

"I am discovered!" "I hadn't the slightest idea you were to be here, but if I had known it, that coat and those furs would have invited the same mistake. Now, honestly, do you blame me?"

"Not at all. It is Carroll you must make your peace with. Mrs. Parsons and she went to Rye for other guests, and as the coachman went too, I was assigned to meet you. At the last moment I couldn't find my own cape, so picked up these and-" "Thus misled me a second time."

SHAKING HER FINGER AT IT AND HER LIPS IN DISAP-

Miss Harian glanced at the innocent y grave face beside her, and touched the pony lightly with her whip.

"I call that downright brutal," she announced, in a tone which implied more mirth than indignation. "Shall we proclaim a truce?"

"Perhaps-I think we'd better if-" She hesitated, and looked at him defantly. "If what?"

"If you ask it." "Well, suppose we both capitulate." "With all the honors of war?"

"Certainly." "Very well then." "Let's shake hands on it." "Not now," she laughed; "the pony's oo lively, and besides, we've already done it-at least, you-" "Remember the truce!" "Forgive me-I almost forgot it." The cart swung past the lodge gate as they spoke, and the blue-stone scatered and crunched beneath the wheels as they flew up the private roadway. A few moments more and they were in the cheery hall, standing before a blazing fire. Mrs. Parsons and her daughter had not yet returned, the butler told them as he busied himself with the tea things

Kennard helped Miss Harlan remove er coat, which she hung over the back of a chair, shaking her finger at it and moving her lips in pantomimic disapproval. Little beads of mist still clung to her hair, sparkling like tiny jewels, and the damp atmosphere had only served to deepen the healthy glow of color in her cheeks. Kennard thought of the last time he had seen her thus, a crumpled jacket in her hand and the white mist clinging to her hair, but with no color in her face. She glanced at him, and he knew the same scene was before her. For an instant he feared she was about to speak of it and thank him for somethingjust what, he did not know-but the few words Mr. Harlan had dropped son she wanted to thank him. He had dreaded this moment and prepared for seen in the cluster of vehicles near it, but now it was at hand he could the conversation. For a few moments neither of them spoke; then she turned to him

"I shall always associate you," she began gravely, "I'm afraid I shall al-

He smiled gratefully. "Was it ruined?"

"Utterly!" exclamation was comically tragic.

"It was well you had presence of mind enough to use it," he observed consolingly. "That was merely the animal instinct of self-preservation. Perhaps not even that, for as I recall it, you had no coat-'

"Oh, you wrong me. It was the foreman whom you saw in his shirtsleeves." She nodded comprehendingly.

"You don't want to talk about it? Very well. Only please don't try to compliment me for involuntary actions. It makes me suspect that you didn't mean- Shall I play the hostess and pour tea?" she asked suddenly, as the butler placed the low table between them. Kennard stretched out his hand for the cup she offered him, and as he took it, looked at her inquiringly. There was a warning light of mischief in her eyes, and he withheld his question till the servant left the

"That I didn't mean what?" he

"What you said." "When?"

"That day. Don't you remember?
"Not what I said." "Dear me, that makes me still more hair from her forekead with a slight

"As to whether you meant what you "Which was?"

"It is hardly worth repeating, since you don't recall it," she answered in an offended tone. "But you did say, whether you meant it or not, "Well, you've got some horse sense!' It was not a polished phrase, perhaps, but, oh-it tasted so good!

Her laughing eyes kindling with enthusiasm met his grown suddenly seri-

"And did I say nothing else?" he asked. "Nothing I care to remember."

"So be It. Though I meant every word-those and others. But don't let's talk about this any more. Is there to be a large house party here?" "Yes, I think so. Quite a few out-

Kennard pulled out his handkerchief and waved it vigorously.
"Respect the flag," he entreated earnestly.

"I humbly apologize. Mistakes will occur at first. We were speaking of the other-guests. Perhaps you know some of them. Roy Gilbert and Stanford Lawrence, two college friends of Garrett Parsons, and Mr. Croyden, are the men.

"Of course I know him. He's quite recovered, then?" "Quite, I believe. The girls are Miss Thompson and Miss Garrett. Have you met them?"

"There's no one else, I think. Yes, forgot, there's a Mr. Maddox." "Not Dave Maddox of California?"

"Yes, I think so." "Is it possible? I haven't seen Dave for years, although he's one of my closest friends. What a small world we live in! Who would have thought of meeting him here? This is a party of pleasant surprises."

Miss Harlan picked up the firetongs and drew her chair nearer the "Speaking of small worlds," she began-"No, thank you, I don't want any help; did you ever know any one who did, when about to assault a wood fire? -Speaking of small worlds, I chanced upon a friend of yours, very unexpectedly the other day-a friend and a great admirer."

"There are not many to answer the description, but I fear to guess. Who was it?"

"Mrs. Mullin."

"Pat Mullin's wife?" 'Yes."

"Where in the world did you come across her?"

"At the Riverside club. She and her children came to a Christmas party there at which I happened to be assist-

"How did you discover she knew They will go as guests of The Commercial Tribune ab-"By accident. I remarked on the solutely freshness and rosiness of the children, at which she told me they lived in the country, and said their father worked in your factory. I said I knew you, and then-well, I've heard panegyrics before, but of all the-"

"Mrs. Mullin has the virtues of the good-hearted Irish, but also the extravagance of the simple-minded." "But, shure, an' her man Pat, she sez," mimicked Miss Harlan, "do wurshup th' very ground ye trids on."

"Pat is another good-natured, faithful. foolish old-"But she further informed me that

"Please spare me Mrs. Mullin's eulogy," he protested.

"It was very impressive, I assure you so much so that I almost determined to write and ask you a favor." Miss Harlan was working with the ongs at a heavy log and did not look up as she spoke.

"Why did you change your mind?" "I didn't think I did, I only postponed the day." "Till when?"

"Till you were in a particularly good

"Am I not qualified now?" She glanced at him quizzically for moment, abandoned the tongs, and vigorously attacked the log with a poker. Then, as the leaping flames lit up her face, she turned her head and studied him with a judicial scrutiny.

"N-o-o," she decided at length. don't think you are-quite. But this is a great favor, and I think I'd rather earn it anyway. Don't you want something very, very much?"

The question was asked almost pleadingly, but with a little gesture of mock impatience. A dozen phrases rose to Kennard's lips at the bidding of that picture in the firelight. There was a challenge in the mischievous, mocking, tempting smile which he longed to meet, but when he answered, it was to the merry, friendly, clear gray eyes he spoke.

"Yes, I think I can suggest some thing. When we first met, you prom ised to make trial of me as a disciple in your school of philosophy, whose sessions were held only in the country. We're in the country now. What is your charge for tuition? You see have a good memory."

"For promises—not voices." Kennard hastily pulled out his handkerchief and tied it on the shovel. "I salute the flag," she laughed, "and capitulate! Here comes the house

[To be Continued.]

HIGHLAND COUNTY STOCK FARM

Pure Bred and Registered Aberdeen Angus Cattle; Large English Berk-shire and Chester White Swine; Shropshire and Lincolnshire Sheep. Young Stock of Best Breeding and In-dividuality for Sale at All Times.

number of Fine Angora Goats for Sale in Lots to Suit Purchasers. H. M. BROWN, Hillaboro, O.

Rocky Mountain Tea Nugge

B. & O. S-W. [

BEST LINE AND SERVICE

FRENCH LICK WEST BADEN

DIRECT CONNECTIONS VIA

SPRINGS

EXCURSION TICKETS GOOD NINETY DAYS. ON SALE DAILY.

Descriptive pamphlet of French Lick and West Baden can be had by applying to any Ticket Agent, B. & O. S-W. or writing

DO YOU

TOUR OF ?

Cincinnati

Will Take

50

WOMEN

TO EUROPE

FREE

With all expenses paid.

Cincinnati Commercial Tribune for par-

Historic And Picturesque Route

ticulars.

Read the Sunday

Tribune

Commercial

THE ....

O. P. McCARTY. General Passenger Agent, Cincinnati, Ohio.

For Two New Yearly

Subscriptions to THE

Or we will send the

Pen and THE NEWS-

HERALD one year for

NEWS-HERALD.

It is a solid 14-K gold pen, fancy carved hard rubber holder. water-tight barrel.

Equal to a pen for which dealers would charge you $2.00 and $2.50.

Every Pen Guaranteed

Don't fail to take advantage of this offer. It will be good for a ahort time only."

YORK

Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Stopover Privileges on all First Class Ticket: .

Selegant Vestibuled Trains And all of them Daily

Coaches with High Back Seats Pullman Drawing Room Sleepers

Observation Sleeping Cars Company's Own Dining Car Service

Meals Served "a la Carte." delightful trip over the Allegheny Mountains, through historic Harper's Ferry and the Valley of the

For Rates, Time of Trains, Sleeping Car Resevations, Etc., call on any Ticket Agent or address

Potomac.

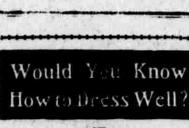

Gen'l. Pass. Agent. Cincinnati, O. JULIUS C. KOCH

O. P. McCARTY,

Office-North High Street Telephone 982. All Orders Promptly filled.

If you cannot eat, sleep or work feel mean, cross and ugly, take Hollister's Rocky Mountain Tea this month. A tonic for the sick. There is no remedy equal to it. 35 cents, Tea or Tablets.

KAUPMANN & BARR.

Toilettes. Junior Toilettes.

TOILETTES FASHION CO.

Notice of Appointment. state of E. V. Grim deceased.

one year of real competition with no smile would be on the other side of systems disarranged in a way he little for very weakness. dreamed of. He had been inclined to work with rather than against young Kennard, but if that individual shought the man who engineered the Milling Companies' deal "ridiculous," it was plain they were an ill-assorted

Mr. Harlan started as he heard the door-bell ring, and realized as he rose to answer the summons for the first time in many years he had worked himself into quite a temper. The butler had not yet retired, and when his master reached the hall the man handed him a card with the name Peter McMannis printed in flourished Show him in and then go to bed, Perkins. I'll close up." Mr. Harian threw himself into his chair with a muttered oath, lit a cigar and picked up the evening paper. He was still reading when his visitor was ushered in, and a curt nod was all the and I'm here to stay." He paused to swallow another but your old milling company is all right. That's what comes of having a friend at court, Josh, for I bet you're as rotten as punk. But say, to see you sittin' over there," McMannis straightened himself and mimicked his host's manner with a drunken leer, "one would never think you could touch anything tougher than a cushion. I know you, you old wood-faced mut-you're as aly as they make 'em and are doin' two tricks a day, I bet, McMannis paused to laugh at this picture, pointing at Mr. Harlan and rocking himself to and fro in an econ his handkerchief.

CHAPTER X. To the cynical eye the crowd in the Grand Central station is apt to typify the monotony of life and suggest its littleness. It is always the same. Mingle with it to-day and return an hour, a day, a month, a year, ten years later, and you will find the same people surrounding and jostling you.

The panting passenger dropped his heavy bag with a groan and looked at his watch. There was half an hour to wait, so thing had "crisscrossed his luck" that day, he admitted to himself, as he shoved his bag under one of the long benches and settled down to sit it out. By the time his train started Ken-

Mrs. Parsons' carriage was not to be

He grasped the girl's _ disengaged in both of his and shook it

'I'm terribly glad to see you. You don't know how glad. I've been in the worst possible temper all day, and if it hadn't been for the thought of coming here to-night, I believe I'd have assassinated half a dozen people. As it is, there are probably more than that number who'd like to assassinate me. It was mighty friendly of you to meet me a night like this," he ran on, asked. specially after I'd missed my train. At first I thought you hadn't come, and was starting to walk when I saw you. Hope you haven't left a house full of company. I'm afraid you have. But